Runes

Do you know how to carve, do you know how to interpret,
Do you know how to stain, do you know how to test out,
Do you know how to ask, do you know how to sacrifice,
Do you know how to dispatch, do you know how to slaughter?

Sayings of the high one v144 Trans Carolyne Larrington 1996

Well, this is the last week you will be subjected to this verse. I have reached the end of it and this week am going to talk about how to slaughter with runes.

Of all the uses of runes this is perhaps the one most at odds with Correllian teachings. Yet the runes belong to a culture which does not adhere to those morals. 'Do you know how to slaughter?' is about more than just the physical act of cutting runes for harmful magic. It is about what runes you use, and why. It is about correctly judging that the time is right. And it is also about clearing the way for new growth to take place.

When using runes for magic you need to know the harm they can do and be aware of the destructive effects of each rune. This is rather like the doctors who may use a deadly poison in small amounts as a medicine. Something like the digitalis (foxglove) has a therapeutic use, but if given in large doses is fatal.

It is a case of knowing that using this rune like this will cause this harm. You can then use that knowledge within whatever moral code you wish to apply. And no I am not about to let that information be known here.

Runes are a part of the Heathen tradition. Heathens do not follow the rule of three or the Rede. Runes historically were used in battle magic either to protect or to attack. You need to judge for yourself when to use runes best for attack or in defence. Of course there is then the theory that the best form of defence is to attack. You need to know how to focus that attack so that the maximum force hit's the enemy and the least ripples affect you. If you are going to use what I call offensive magic then there's no point taking half measures. But you need to take responsibility for your actions. You did the magic, therefore YOU need to be ready for the effects of it. Both those you intended and those you did not. And you need to do it right first time.

I am a Vitki. I know how to carve and interpret; to stain and test; to ask and to sacrifice; to dispatch and to slaughter. The knowledge is a great source of strength to me. Heathenry is an holistic tradition in that it takes both dark and light and creates harmony from them rather than trying to attain one and banish the other. To a Heathen trying to make everything love and light just seems unbalanced and out of touch with the universe. Both light and dark are a necessary part of life that we should accept rather than fight against.

The balance is not static but swings from one side to the other. Thus it is in the nature of heathens to have destructive phases and creative phases. We believe that death is just a step to new life, that destruction is just a part of creation that needs to take place. We do not fear destruction and we do not hesitate to use runes to attack if that is what is needed. After all that is what they were made for. If you have an obstruction you need to know how to clear it, If you have old dead stuff in your life that needs throwing in a skip you need to know how to shift it. And if you have a rock in your way you need to know how to blast it.

GARLIC

Garlic (Allium sativum) is a perennial plant native to Asia, and a member of the lily family. Though it is referred to as the "stinking rose", garlic is an essential ingredient in many types of cuisine around the world.

The history of garlic dates back to approximately 2300 B.C. in ancient Sumeria, and throughout this time, garlic has been used for its antiseptic and antibacterial qualities. When Egyptian medical papers were found dating back to 1550 B.C., they contained eight hundred formulas for the therapeutic uses of garlic. More recently, the famous French chemist, Louis Pasteur, found that garlic was an antibacterial agent.

People have, for thousands of years, used garlic to expel parasitic worms that lodge in the intestinal tract. Some studies show that garlic has an ability to kill amoeba and hookworms. In recent years, Indian studies have demonstrated that garlic has fibrinolytic activity. Fibrin is a protein necessary in clot formation. The protein is essential in the body, but when it exists in excess, there is an increased chance of clots disrupting blood flow. Garlic may have the ability to dissolve fibrin, in a process called fibrinolysis. Garlic has also demonstrated the ability to inhibit fibrinogen receptors on platelets. This is caused by the compound ajoene, which is a major component in garlic.

The Chemistry of Garlic

Today, much more is known about garlic due to advances in the field of organic chemistry. Many individual compounds have been analyzed and tested for their biological values. When garlic is crushed, it releases at least one hundred sulfur-containing compounds, and it is sulfur that gives garlic its distinctive odor.

The best method for using garlic in your diet is to cut or crush the raw clove. When garlic is crushed, it releases an enzyme called allinase, and this enzyme converts alliin, the substance in raw garlic, to allicin. Allicin is an extremely active constituent of garlic. When three allicin molecules combine, they form a compound called ajoene, which has antithrombotic (anti-clotting) properties. This means that it can prevent platelets (the blood cells involved in clotting) from clumping, which is what leads to blood clots

A natural weapon against infection

The antibiotic properties of garlic have earned it the popular name "nature's antibiotic" but this incredible stinking rose can provide a "full house" of activity against fungi, yeast's and viral infections. The antifungal properties of garlic have long been used in folk medicine for the treatment of Candida infections, especially those of the skin.

The first serious published evidence was produced by Schmidt and Marquardt in 1936 when they demonstrated the extraordinary fungistatic and fungicidal action of freshly pressed garlic juice and dried garlic with epidermophyte cultures. Later, American and Russian authors reported similar findings almost simultaneously, and since then, numerous studies have appeared in which the inhibition of fungal growth by garlic and/or its constituents, mainly allicin, is described.

Further evidence that allicin is responsible for the anticandidal activity of garlic has been demonstrated in a study where pure allicin was found to be highly active - with a minimum inhibitory concentration (MIC) of only 7 ug/mL. The study also showed that several varieties of onion had much less anticandidal and antibacterial activity than garlic (Hughes & Lawson, 1991).

Growth and respiration are also inhibited by garlic juice in Candida albicans, Trichophyton cerebriforme, and T. granulosum. At a dilution of 1:1000, garlic juice had no harmful effect on tissue cultures, such as chicken embryos or kidney cells; however, it completely inhibited the growth of yeast.

Currently relatively few publications exist to show the activity of garlic and its components against viral infections. However the evidence that does exist shows clearly that garlic, or more accurately, allicin, has significant in vitro and in vivo activity. Among the viruses that are sensitive to garlic extracts are the human cytomegalovirus, influenza B, herpes simplex virus types 1 and 2, parainfluenza virus type 3, vaccinia virus, vesicular stomatitis virus and human rhinovirus type 2.

It was reported that, during an influenza epidemic, the former Soviet Union once imported 500 tons of garlic for the acute treatment of the disease. Garlic therefore acquired the name "Russian Penicillin".

Before the development of vaccines against poliomyelitis, garlic was used successfully as a prophylactic against polio. It was also observed that garlic was very effective against viral influenza A

Significant activity against influenza viruses was also shown with intranasal and intramuscular application of an aqueous garlic extract in mice. Prophylactic application prolonged the survival time of the animals. Sodium fluoride enhanced the antiviral effect of garlic extract

The Order of Web Weavers Crystal Web Mapping Project

The Order of the Web Weavers has been working diligently on mapping the Crystal Web. If any of you have a crystal that you have added or removed from the Crystal Web contact us to ensure are records up to date and accurate.

The information we need in order to best catalogue your crystal/s is the following. Your Craft Name and E-mail Address along with your City, State, Country, Latitude, and Longitude. Sent to the following e-mail address: wwcw@correllianorders.info

Please include the above information, if you have removed your crystal from the Crystal Web along with 'Remove' in the subject line. If you have added several crystals then we would need a separate entry for each crystal, unless they are located together. If they are located together then please include how many crystals are at that location.

We are excited about this project and hope that you will be too. Once the crystals have been properly catalogued we can then begin placing them on the map program. This will give us a good visualization on the Crystal Web. Thank you in advance for your participation in this wonderful project.

Bright Blessings,
The Order of Web Weavers
