Veterinary Notes C is for Cancer

Here I shall attempt to explain what cancer is in general, rather than discussing different forms.

Cancer is a very unhelpful lay term that unfortunately strikes fear in all. The correct term is neoplasia – new growth. The cells of the body are normally programmed to die after a pre-determined period. In neoplasia the cells begin to multiply faster than normal and the new cells differ from the originals. These cells also survive longer than the original cells of the affected tissue. This large mass of extra cells continues to enlarge forming either a solid tumour (mass), or infiltrating the surrounding tissues like long prying fingers or filling bone marrow and affecting blood production. The neoplasia may be classed as either malignant or benign. The benign neoplasias are usually described as --oma such as lipoma a benign tumour of fat. The classification of benign applies when the neoplasia does not spread in the blood beyond its original site affecting many more organs and tissues. A benign tumour is not necessarily non-fatal. A benign tumour within the brain can kill as quickly as a malignant tumour. Benign tumours may recur at the original site after surgical excision. The classification of malignant is applied to those tumours that spread in the blood. In the human world a classic example is breast cancer that will migrate to affect brain, lungs and bones. This spread is known as metastasis. They often have the suffix ----sarcoma eg osteosarcoma, a malignant tumour of bone.

Treatment of neoplasia aims to stop the multiplication of the neoplastic cells and so destroy the abnormal tissue mass. Unfortunately nearly all drugs or therapies such as radiation used to treat neoplasia will affect normal cells and this is responsible for the range of extremely unpleasant side-effects experienced by humans. The fast rate of reproduction of cells within the neoplasia is advantageous as most drug treatments target dividing cells. The neoplasia contains more dividing cells than the surrounding body tissues and so bears the brunt of the drug's effects. Where possible drug therapy is combined with excision to remove all or most of the tumour mass and this allows histological confirmation of the tumour type. In potentially malignant neoplasias, the area bordering the excised area is closely examined by histopathology (microscopic examination of tissues) to ensure that no tumour cells remain. The “fingers” mentioned above may be no more than one cell thick and so cannot be seen by the naked eye.

In animals the inevitable side-effects of drug therapy raises an ethical question. Is it right to subject an animal to such effects often with a low chance of success? The answer is nearly always “no”. The suffering of the animal as a result of treatment is not ethical. In animals treatments for neoplasia are generally limited to excision (which may be all that is required), some of the milder drug treatments, or radiation at a specialist centre.

If your animal does have the misfortune to develop a neoplasia the questions to ask are: is it malignant or benign? If benign will it cause a problem in that position? Is it operable? What are the other options for treatment? Where the prognosis is poor most vets will not attempt to estimate the time scale till death as this is enormously variable and some animals may, with supportive treatment, survive and enjoy life for a surprisingly long period.

Enquire Within for Everything (Well Almost!)

Merry Meet Everyone!

Herbal magic, doesn't it sound great?

Who among us doesn't feel the power by just saying the words?

Who was that, third row third seat from the end? Well stand up and make your feelings heard: Too slow, old fashioned you say, you maybe prefer the quick flash of a wand or a blink of the eyes, or perhaps a twitch of the nose?

Well who wouldn't when they are in a hurry, but for all that glitz and glitter, if they hadn't done the learning and had good writers even Dumbledore, Samantha and any other media witch would have had trouble getting the most out of their spells..

And so we carry on with the nine herbs of the Charm lets see what our friend Raven says about the Magical and Shamanic uses of Plantain, Watercress and Chamomile.

Plantain:

Traditional Magical Uses:

Bind plantain with red wool, to the head to cure headaches. Like mugwort, place in shoes to cure weariness on long trips. Hang it in your car to prevent evil from entering. Carrying the root protects from snakebite.

Said to cause regeneration - Pliny claimed that if several pieces of flesh are boiled in a pot with plantain, it will join them again, the same is observed of Comfrey Root.

Shamanic Magical Use: This is the plant of Helheim, the land of the Dead. Its shamanic uses are many and varied and rather subtle.

First, it can create a certain amount of invisibility for a short period of time. Notice how the weedy plantain manages to make itself so inconspicuous? That's a power that you can harness, especially if you are journeying or pathwalking.

Second, it can be used in recels to speak to the ancestors, or to find your way to the Helvegr. Its name "waybread" echoes this usage - waybread will help you find the way.

If you actually manage to get yourself astrally wounded, plantain is the plant to resort to. In some cases, it can even save you from astral death, if your body is still healthy. Its regenerative gift of bringing flesh back to life doesn't work on the physical plane, but I have good reason to suspect that it works on other planes. Since I've not ever been astrally killed by enemies, I've never been in a position to experiment. Those who find the need to implement it should let me know how it goes.

WaterCress

Traditional Magical Uses: None that we know of at the moment.

Shamanic Magical Uses: This is the plant of Niflheim, land of water and ice and mists. Niflheim is one of the two primal worlds (the other being Muspellheim) and in its care "primal" has the connotation not just of "first" but of "unfinished". There is something shifting and malleable about Niflheim, and not just because a significant portion of it is ice floes and water. Solidity sometimes shifts there....not quickly, but slowly. Watercress can be used to do this kind of slow shifting of reality, seeing its icy solidity become watery and then as misty as the Land of Mists, and then, hopefully, you can shape it little by little.

If you place it under your tongue, you'll notice that it is peppery, even burns a little. Stay with the sensation. Breathe through it. See your breath come out as mist. Keep breathing, and working with the spirit of the plant, until reality starts to blur a little. This will not happen due to some psychedelic experience - Watercress is certainly not psychoactive - but only due to the work of the plant spirit.

Conjure the problem that needs to be changed as if it was a solid object in front of you. Reach out and touch it. If your fingers slip off it, it is still ice - Isa, a blockage - and cannot be changed. Breath and work at it longer. Sometimes it won't change - you aren't a god, some things are beyond your power - but sometimes it will start to become more malleable. Shape it quickly, and accurately, with a clear idea in your mind of what it should look like. Sometimes it shifts back on you, and you have to do it again. If three tries fail, give up.

Viper's Bugloss

Traditional Magical Uses: Keeps away snakes. Culpeper's Complete Herbal describes Viper's Bugloss as follows: "It is a most gallant herb of the Sun"; it is a pity it is not more in use than it is.

It is an especial remedy against the biting of the Viper, and all other venomous beasts, or serpents; as also against poison, or poisonous herbs. Discorides and others say, That whosoever shall take of the herb or root before they be bitten, they shall not be hurt by the poison of any serpent."

Shamanic Magical Use: This is the plant of Jotunheim, the land of giants and trolls. It is a land of great mountains, great storms, great beasts, and great hunters, and this is the herb that hunts down sickness.

To use, charge the plant with a spell of seek-and-destroy. I find that this is best done with a song (you don't have to be a great singer or carry a tune, Atterlothe doesn't care) which describes to the plant the nature of the prey, why this prey is its natural enemy and deserves to die, and gives it praise and thanks for its great hunting ability. Then you eat the herb, whole or in tea, and let it do its work.

Chamomile

Traditional Magical Uses: A solar plant, associated with the sun and the god Baldur. It is used to attract money, and a handwash is used by gamblers.

Use in sleep incenses (and tea!); makes the best sleep potion (though personally I prefer it blended with Passionflower and Hops rather than on its own.). Removes curses and hexes when sprinkled around the property.

Shamanic Magical Uses: This is the plant of Asgard, the land of the Aesir. Its English name Maythen was originally pronounced Maegthen, as can be seen from the Lacnunga poem, and maeg is cognate to mage, meaning powerful.

Note: There are two kinds of chamomile, related and similar, with the same usages. One is a low-growing perennial, Anthemis nobilis, also known as Roman chamomile. The other is a tall, annual, German chamomile. Although there is no proof exactly which is Maegthen, my bet is on for the more northerly German chamomile.

Chamomile is a solar plant, and it harnesses the power of the Sun. As the plant of golden Asgard, it can be burned in recels or scattered as a way to send your words straight to the Aesir and have them hear you. I suspect few of them would ignore you if you were holding Maegthen in your hand.

It burns away the darkness and the creeping negativity, as its medicinal nature as an antifungal demonstrates. Used magically, it can be a powerful antidepressant. Why, then, does it cause sleep? One of the symptoms of depression is actually a lack of good, solid, peaceful sleep, and Chamomile is the best plant for this purpose.

There is also, that finding a way out of depression is a long, slow journey that may require changes in brain chemistry, a finicky business at best. This sort of thing is best done slowly and quietly, over time, preferably on a sleeping person. To bring the Sun into someone's life, give them tea made from charged and hallowed Chamomile that has been asked to slowly purge the depressing chemicals from their brain, every night when they go to sleep, for a long time, perhaps months. One day they may find that they no longer need it, but if it does nothing after three turns of the moon, there is something going on that even this herb cannot cure, and you can discontinue it.

I find myself truly enjoying the Northern-Traditional take on these herbs in particular, and I do hope you are enjoying them too.

Until next time;
Merry Part

A-Z of Dragons

LADON

Origin: Greek mythology

A dragon from Greek myth that protected the golden apples belonging to the Goddess Hera.

Hercules had been given the task of stealing three golden apples from a tree that had been given to the Goddess Hera. Ladon, a huge dragon with a hundred heads, guarded the apples. Ladon had curled himself around the tree so nobody could get to it.

Hercules decided to ask Atlas for help. Atlas has somehow offended the gods and, as punishment, was made to carry the world on his shoulders. Hercules offered to take on the burden for an hour if Atlas would go and retrieve the apples for him. Atlas enthusiastically agreed, and Hercules got rid of the dragon problem by killing the hundred-headed beast with one arrow.

Atlas picked the golden apples and, seeing how good it was not to have the world on his shoulders, went back to Hercules and told him he was leaving but would be back in a few months. Hercules agreed but begged Atlas to take the world back for a few minutes so that he could get some padding for his head. Atlas took back the world and Hercules took the apples and left.

Hera was so saddened when she found her dragon had died, that she made a place for him in the sky as the constellation Draco The Dragon.

LEANA

Origin: Magick

Léana is one of the dragons who watch over the dreams of those touched by dragons. She is the sister of Léas the moon dragon. She appears as a silver/white dragon whose wings are flecked with silver. She has a mane of silver hair.

Léana helps when nightmares enter your dreams, she can replace the fear with peace and help you combat your dream demons. She often works with other dragons, putting their teachings into dream form to help the student learn easier.

LEAS

Origin: Magick

Léas is also sometimes known as the Moonbeam Dragon. She appears as a beautiful silver/white scaled, western style dragon. Her wings seem flecked with glitter and she wears a crown of stars on her forehead. She is the sister of Léana, one of the dragons of dreams, and the two are never far from each other.

Léas can only be contacted when the moon is full, it seems this is when her connection with earth is the strongest. She really complements the moons own power and she can help raise energy for full moon rituals. Her energy looks like swirling silver glitter in the darkness.

Merry Meet fellow Wiccans to my Wiccan World.

My weekend has been such a good one, as I have headache/migraine due to the density of the weather. When you are walking outside it feels like you are walking through thick, sticky mud, but it's invisible as you can imagine. It feels like it's thunder and rain in the air, but it will not come any at all. We are desperately need rain outside, as it has only been showers and no real rainy weather for a long, long time, now!

My trip home went alright though, as it wasn't anything happen. The bus was 20 minutes late, but as long as it came I was pleased. I had two girls in their twenties talking with me, and we had loads of fun while we sat on the bus. It was a trip on 7 hours, so it turned out to be a very long talk between us. We get some sleep, but not as much as we three were needed. It means that I was sleeping mostly all day long during Friday. I think I was awake about 3 hours or so on that day, and I went to bed for the night at 8 PM. So it meant that I missed the Ritual that I so wanted to attend, but I will attend it next Friday instead. If I am allowed I will lead the ritual, otherwise I only will call a quarter, if that is needed of course.

It was real great to get home again, as I had missed my family at home so much. I was greeted with so much love when I got home that I couldn't ask for more. All of my family, both the dogs, the cats, and my lovely man were showering me with hugs and kisses. There was no stop to it, until I told them all that I needed to sit down. I also took my lovely furry babies out for a walk that morning, as I came home at 8 AM and my man wasn't that of an early bird. I had a splendid with them on my walk, as we play "catch the ball" and even my female dog did fetch her ball. She has actually continued to do that, whenever I have taken their balls out with me on my walks. It's so fun to see her playing as she has always before been so "lazy" and haven't had the energy to play with her ball. Now, she is more than enough eager to get it, and is almost sad when I am turning back home again.

The weekend has been a relaxed and nice one, and I have been looking within me to see if I have something to learn from at this time. There have been some things that I have needed to heal, as I finally realize that I'm no longer living with one foot in two places. I lived for 7 years down in Landskrona, south end of Sweden, and have moved to Bålsta, outside our capitol town Stockholm. From that I have felt for about 1 ½ years now, that I have had one foot in each town. Now however when I was down visiting my "sister", I finally found out that I am living with all my person, spirit and mind up in Bålsta. That was a great feeling to acknowledge, and at last feel that I'm not living half of my life on another place.

I am so happy and pleased with my life, that I at times feel like I am living in a dream. Yes, I actually have to pinch my arm, to really believe and grasp that it is true. I have the dream life that I have longing for since me and my man broke up. Yes, we have been together once before but then it only last for about 2 years. It was a lot of things that didn't work out then, as I needed to learn some more lessons in life before we could live together again. After 9 years I believe that Goddess thought that I had learned the lessons that I needed. Now we are as happy as we ever can be. We don't need to get it legally to be married, as we already feel and act as married. Plus that we have done our hand fasting ceremony, so we are married before the Goddess that is good enough for us.

I will share our hand fasting ritual with you, but it was not as fancy as you all think though.. It was a fine one, but not a real ritual per se. More like lightning of candles and talking about it. We made some commitments to each other, and then talked a little bit more. In my mind and thinking we were hand fasted there and then, but we will do the real ritual in time. Just that I need to write one that is fitting for us, and is specially made for this occasion. That takes some time, and I want everything to be just perfect. I also want to draw a hand fasting picture for that one and to do that I need to get in the mood for it. I have had so much on my plate lately, that I haven't found the place or the time.

I am so happy, that I could burst. I will take all my happiness I have and throw it all on my family. They are so well deserved of it, as they have been so nice and kind to me during my time as a half person. Now I truly can concentrate on my life with my family, and the only thing that is missing is that I want to have my "sister" living near by me. She will in about 1 ½ year move to our location, and then I can be as happy as I ever can be.

I send out healing energy and love to those that need it, and take as much as you want. I have learned that the more you send out, the more you get back. The three-fold law also known as Karma. I also want to send healing energy to all higher-self's that is longing for healing and help. I send it especially to our Mother Earth so She can heal from all the harmful scars and wounds that we have made and are making on Her.

Take care until Thursday. Blessed be all of you.

Love and Light
Hugz and Blessings

A–Z of Religions: Bön

Bön was the indigenous religion of Tibet before the arrival of Buddhism in the 7th century AD.

His Holiness Menri Trizin, the spiritual leader of Bon, conducts a ceremony at the Menri Monastery (photo © The Bon Foundation). Today, Bön is similar to Tibetan Buddhism. It is a matter of controversy whether Bön influenced Tibetan Buddhism or the other way around.

Bön is spelled either Bön or Bon, and is sometimes called Bonism. Followers of Bön are known as Bönpo or Bon-po.

Date founded: none (Original Bön); 16,000 BC (Yungdrung Bön, according to the Bönpo); 14th cent. AD (New Bön)

Place founded: Tibet

Founder: none (Original Bön); Tonpa Shenrab Miwoche (Yungdrung Bön)

Adherents: unknown, perhaps around 100,000

Both scholars and the Bönpo themselves distinguish between original Bön and modern Bön. "Original Bön" refers to the indigenous religion of Tibet, which was animistic (believing that nature is pervaded by good and evil spirits) and shamanistic. The name was probably derived from the ritual recitation (Bön, meaning "invocation") of its practitioners.

The exact nature of original Bön is difficult to determine, since all early descriptions of it are from the Buddhist perspective and intended to discredit it. After the first diffusion of Buddhism into Tibet in the 7th century, Bön was persecuted under Buddhist rulers, but it survived and became more organized at the time of the second diffusion of Buddhism in the 11th century.

The Bönpo teach a second stage of Bön, which scholars generally dismiss, called Yungdrung Bön. This stage of Bön is said to have been founded by a Buddha-like figure named Shenrab Miwoche, who lived 18,000 years ago in a mythical land of Zhang Zhung near Tibet.

Like the Buddha, Shenrab renounced his life as a prince to become a monk, achieved enlightenment, and taught others how to attain it. He thus converted the people from animistic Bön to Yungdrung ("eternal") Bön. The claim, therefore, is that Bön incorporated Buddhist-like elements prior to and apart from the influence of Buddhism.

Alternatively, Tibetan Buddhist scholars have identified Shenrab with Lao-Tzu, making Bön a derivative of Taoism. Modern scholars have also suggested Shaivite (Hindu sect devoted to Shiva) influence from Kashmir in the development of Bön.

Bön as it is practiced now, known as "New Bön," is essentially a form of Tibetan Buddhism. It began in the 14th century when some Bön teachers began to adopt Tibetan Buddhist practices related to Padmasambhava. Although New Bön differs considerably from Yungdrun Bön, the practitioners of New Bön regard their religion as part of a continuous Bön tradition that includes the prior stages. According to the Oxford Dictionary of World Religions, however, "any connection between ancient and modern Bön is extremely tenuous."

It is commonly believed that Tibetan Buddhism was shaped by Bön, but the Oxford Dictionary refutes this as well. "Contrary to the popular misconception that Buddhism was significantly influenced by Bön when it entered Tibet, it is clear that what is known of Bön today is almost completely influenced by Mahayana Buddhism, which was itself transplanted from India into Tibet virtually unchanged." The Dalai Lama, who is supportive of Bön, shares a similar perspective: "In its beginning, I believe, it [Bön] was not such a fruitful religion, but when Buddhism began to flourish in Tibet, Bön also had an opportunity to enrich its own religious philosophy and meditational resources."

Today, Bön can be found in the more isolated parts of northern and western Tibet, as well as in exile at the Tashi Menri Ling Monastery in Dolanji in Himachal Pradesh, India. The current leader of Bön is His Holiness Lungtok Tenpai Nyima.

According to the Chinese census, about 10% of Tibetans (about 100,000 people) follow Bön. At the time of the communist takeover there were approximately 300 Bön monasteries in Tibet and western China. According to a recent survey, there are 264 active Bön monasteries, nunneries, and hermitages.

In its earlier forms Bön doctrine was a dualistic theism, teaching that the creation of the world was brought about by coexistent good and evil principles, but the philosophy of modern Bön is generally in accord with Buddhist non-theistic tenets.

However, Bön ritual includes worship, iconography, and meditation on peaceful and wrathful deities (as in Tibetan Buddhism). In addition to peaceful and wrathful deities, Bön distinguishes between "enlightened" deities and those who are still "of this world," or not fully enlightened. There are four principal peaceful deities, known as the Four Transcendent Lords. These are led by a goddess, Yum, "the Mother," followed by three male deities known as Lha, "the God," Sipa, "the Procreator," and Tönpa, "the Teacher."

The main Bön rituals center around the wrathful or tutelary deities (yidam), divided into Mother Tantras and Father Tantras. They are depicted with fierce expressions, many arms and legs wielding frightening weapons, and trampling enemies under their feet. As in Tibetan Buddhism, meditation on the wrathful deities is a means of understanding reality and attaining enlightenment.

Bön shares with the Nyingma schools of Buddhism the structure of the nine yanas (ways or vehicles), which climax in the meditation of "the great perfection." This Bönpos claim was transmitted first by Shenrab and only later entered the Nyingma tradition. The Nine Ways of Bön are:

- Way of Prediction (Phyva-gshen Theg-pa) - astrology, ritual and prognostication
- Way of the Visual World (sNang-shen theg-pa) - explains the psychophysical universe
- Way of Illusion (Phrul-gshen theg-pa) - rites for dispersing adverse forces
- Way of Existence (Srid-gshen theg-pa) - funeral and death rituals
- Way of a Lay Follower (dGe-bsnyen theg-pa) - ten principles for wholesome activity
- Way of a Monk (Drnag-srnng theg-pa) - monastic rules and regulations
- Way of Primordial Sound (Adkar theg-pa) - integration of an exalted practitioner into the mandala of highest enlightenment
- Way of Primordial Shen (Ye-gshen theg-pa) - seeking a true tantric master and the spiritual commitments that binds a disciple to his tantric master
- Way of Supreme Doctrine (Bla-med theg-pa) - the doctrine of great perfection.

Bön practices are similar in many ways to those of Tibetan Buddhism, including the use of thangkas, mandalas, and meditation on various deities as means to enlightenment. The monastic life is heavily emphasized. As in original Bön, astrology and medicine remain important.

THE ORDER OF WORLD WALKERS

This Correllian order is headed by the Rev. Krystel High Correll and she is offering training for those who wish to join the order. The training consists of twelve lessons, one a month, for a year, offered through e-mail.

The purpose of this order is to fulfill the deeper purposes of the Correllian Tradition--advanced psychic and spiritual work, primarily conducted on multi-dimensional levels. This work includes:

Learning to connect and work with your spirit guides. Conscious dying and conscious incarnation. Advanced dream work. Exploring the known boundaries of the multi-dimensional universe, then conducting independent work to go beyond those boundaries. The study of time and advanced work within it. Soul rescue (helping those who are not aware they have died, or are not willing to cross over). Mediumship (being a voice for the so-called dead, visiting the land of the dead and communicating with them, and building a pathway between the living and the dead). Healing, both personal and of our Earth.

These purposes are divided among five houses that consist of the members who are dedicated to the work of the House.

The Order of World Walkers is a working order. The training is only the beginning. Each of the houses offer work that can be done for the rest of your life, if you choose to do it.

I believe that everyone who chooses to become a member of the order chose this before coming into this life time to continue work begun in other lives.

The Order of Web Weavers Crystal Web Mapping Project

The Order of the Web Weavers has been working diligently on mapping the Crystal Web. If any of you have a crystal that you have added or removed from the Crystal Web contact us to ensure are records up to date and accurate.

The information we need in order to best catalogue your crystal/s is the following. Your Craft Name and E-mail Address along with your City, State, Country, Latitude, and Longitude. Sent to the following e-mail address: wwcw@correllianorders.info

Please include the above information, if you have removed your crystal from the Crystal Web along with 'Remove' in the subject line. If you have added several crystals then we would need a separate entry for each crystal, unless they are located together. If they are located together then please include how many crystals are at that location.

We are excited about this project and hope that you will be too. Once the crystals have been properly catalogued we can then begin placing them on the map program. This will give us a good visualization on the Crystal Web. Thank you in advance for your participation in this wonderful project.

Bright Blessings,
The Order of Web Weavers
