Proud to be Pagans

Kelly Jasper

Theoretically, there are two types of witches. "There are those of us who live in the broom closet and then there are those of us who" are more visible, said Joe Zuchowski, a Wiccan high priest.

A festival, he figures, just might help that.

In actuality, there are several varieties of pagans, a few of which will be represented at Augusta's first Pagan Pride Day, today at Lake Olmstead Park.

"We want to let people know there are pagans out there," said his wife, Jezibell Anat. She's a Wiccan high priestess and a coordinator of Pagan Pride Day.

The event includes music, dance, children's games and information sessions such as Ask the Wizard.

"We want to invite people in," Mrs. Anat said. "We want to explain what we are."

And what would that be?

"We are real people. We are about diversity," Mrs. Anat said. "We believe there is no one-size-fits-all religion. We are a genuine spiritual path."

Paganism is a family of faiths with ancient roots united by a reverence for nature and harmony with the earth, one another, and one's self.

Modern paganism takes many forms, but the faiths it encompasses have been around for ages, said Carolyn Jones Medine, an associate professor in the University of Georgia Department of Religion, whose work includes an emphasis on religious theory and thought, women's spirituality and writings.

"Paganism has been a legitimate path for a long time," she said. "If you look at Western religions, you find the influence of paganism. It underlines our major traditions. Things like the Christmas tree, that's early incorporation of a pagan tradition."

Events to raise the profile of Paganism and recognize its influence are growing.

The first Pagan Pride Day was held in 1998, with 17 celebrations in the United States and one in Canada. This year, more than 120 events are planned in 10 countries and 41 states.

"We want acceptance. We want respect. We want more than tolerance just because it's politically correct," said Michelle Boshears, a Wiccan high priestess named Dawnwalker.

She's a retired U.S. Army major who serves as the Distinctive Faith Group leader for Pagans and Wiccans at Fort Gordon. Her weekly services draw about 20 people.

It's hard to say just how many Pagans live in the Augusta area because many practice alone, but the local Covenant of Universal Unitarian Pagans has about 12 members, said Mrs. Anat, the group's liaison.

She joined the Unitarian Universalist Church after moving to Augusta with Mr. Zuchowski in 2007. Mrs. Anat, a belly dance instructor, and Mr. Zuchowski, who is chief custodian at the Augusta Jewish Community Center and moonlights as a storyteller, had been living in New York.

"People didn't bat an eye there. But we're not in that situation here," Mrs. Anat said. "People are afraid. They hide their pentagrams. They don't talk to their coworkers about it. They just mumble at Christmas.

"The first question you get is, 'What church do you go to?' What do you say when you're pagan?"

Mrs. Boshears counts herself fortunate that she hasn't faced discrimination. Her neighbors know what she believes, and she said they're fine with the fact that she conducts Wiccan rituals at her farm in Grovetown.

"If people come over, it's hard to hide the fact that I'm pagan. I've got five altars around my house," she said. "A lot of pagans, they're shy. If their parents or brothers and sisters come over, they hide their altars. They feel like they have to do that to avoid being chastised."

Mrs. Boshears has never had that problem.

"I grew up with an understanding that this was OK," she said. "My family was Christian, but I would not call us the mainstream. We went to church but we went to all different types of churches. You name it, I gave it a try."

Mrs. Anat grew up in the Methodist church.

"I knew early that this church, this one-God, one-faith wouldn't work," she said.

Her attraction to Wicca, the largest and most popular form of paganism, developed out of her interest in history and mythology.

"People thought I was this history geek before I was old enough to express it in theological terms," she said.

Mr. Zuchowski grew up Roman Catholic. He was 12 when he found his first book on witchcraft and 19 when he was initiated into his first coven.

Books by Carl Sagan and Richard Dawkins fill his shelf, but so do a Bible, a Quran and the Egyptian Book of the Dead.

"Pagans are often portrayed as airy, fairy, new-age types," he said. "But we're philosophical. We don't understand how anyone can prove their faith, and so we're open to other ideas. We're all seeking the divine, and isn't that the point?"

Today at the festival, they'll find out if others agree, Mrs. Boshears said.

"We hope so, but it's a risk," she said. "There's confusion. Our focus is presenting paganism in a light that dispels some of the dark misconceptions."

Quote & Thought of the Day

Rev. Nehal

Quote of the Day:

The less you open your heart to others, the more your heart suffers.

Deepak Chopra

Thought of the day:

Simple pleasures

When you place too many conditions on your enjoyment of life, there is no enjoyment. You can end up working so much to get the conditions just right, that there's no time left to really enjoy yourself.

Let go of the need to have everything just so. Simply and fully enjoy being where you are.

In every moment there is beauty. Rather than striving to make that beauty into what you think it should be, just enjoy it as it is.

Happiness is not something you must prove. Find enjoyment in simply letting it flow.

Instead of working to do happy, be happy. See that the possibilities for joy are far greater than anything you could ever contrive.

There is plenty of joy to be lived in this moment. Let the uniqueness of the moment help you discover new ways of tasting life's real pleasures

Slavic Paganism in Kievan Russia and the Coming of Christianity

Yaroslav V. Riabinin

Orthodox Christianity is currently the dominant religion in parts of the world that are inhabited by Eastern Slavs, such as Russians and Ukrainians. However, this was not always the case. At the end of the first millennium C.E., the state of Kyivan Rus' (Kievan Russia) had undergone significant changes – most notably, the acceptance of a new faith. Before that time, the Slavonic tribes held on to pagan beliefs about the world, such as polytheism and reverence of nature. Although there are very few historical traces of this ancient religion, the lack of information about the subject is in no way a reflection of its importance. On the contrary, the paganism of pre-Christian Slavs has been kept alive by its followers over the centuries and it continues to play a role in the cultural development of various peoples. In this paper, I intend to explore the pagan religion and mythology of the early Slavs, before their Christianization. Furthermore, I will examine the adoption of Christianity as the official religion of Kievan Russia in greater detail. My main focus will be on the persistence of pagan elements in the religious and cultural life of the Slavs, despite the efforts of authorities to spread Orthodoxy in the region.

Before the coming of Christianity, the early Slavs were pagan, which means that they worshipped many deities, as well as various sylvan and household spirits. The culture was polytheistic, rather than monotheistic. Cross introduces these beliefs in the following manner: “The religion of the pagan Slavs was thus primarily animistic in its origins, and the animistic personification of powers of nature is further exemplified by abundant references to water and forest spirits (vily, beregynji, lesie)”. The religion was also ancestral and it placed an emphasis on unity and interconnectedness with nature. This is reminiscent of Hinduism and the concept of Ultimate Reality, where everything can be reduced to one basic property. An example of this is the pagan Goddess of the Earth – Mat' Syra Zemlya (“Mother Moist Earth”) – who is the mother of all Russians and is not to be harmed (dug up) until her birth-giving time comes (at a holiday called “Maslenica”, which is also known as the Vernal Equinox).

However, it has also been argued that paganism is inherently dualistic. This is evident in the contrast between light and dark, male and female, life and death, and so on. For example, there is the Rod and the Rozhenitsa – the God and Goddess of Creation, who provide every human being with a soul at birth. Also, there is Dazhbog (also called “Belobog”, or “White-God”) who has dominion over the sky, and Chernobog (“Black-God”) who rules the underworld. Such opposites are quite common in Slavic paganism, thus supporting the claim that dualism is a vital part of the religion.

Pagan festival to honor earth-based faith

Dana Clark Felty

For hundreds, maybe thousands of years, forms of paganism reigned over human spirituality.

But after the rise of Judaism, Christianity and Islam, the word "pagan" became synonymous with "evil."

Modern pagans want to change that image.

"Paganism is not something to be feared," said Paige McDuffie of Vidalia. "We're just regular people."

Area pagans, wiccans and other followers of "earth-based" spirituality are gearing up for the seventh annual Pagan Pride Festival to mark the harvest season with fellowship, fun and education.

Organizers expect up to 300 participants at the daylong event taking place Oct. 17 at Emmet Park. A can food drive will benefit America's Second Harvest of Coastal Georgia.

"Our goal is education and awareness, to educate the masses and to be out in the open," said Adriana Aponte, 37, founder of the Savannah Pagan Pride Festival, the first in the state in 2002.

Today, the local festival is one of at least five in Georgia and hundreds around the world.

Pagans resist structure or definition, usually recognizing anyone who describes themselves as a pagan.

PaganPride.org lists definitions of pagans, but at the top is "honoring, revering, or worshipping a deity or deities found in pre-Christian, classical, aboriginal or tribal mythology.

Paganism also can include shamanism, "earth-based spirituality" or a focus on a feminine god. Practitioners accept labels like wicca, witchcraft, druid, neo-pagan, Native American spirituality or asatru.

The festival brings them together under the umbrella of paganism.

"It's a movement that is more spiritual than anything, that is free from structure and leaders and gurus," Aponte said.

Modern paganism

Aponte expects more participation at this year's festival than in recent years, largely because of early publicity efforts.

It's difficult to estimate the number of pagans in the area, since there is no membership organization representing practitioners.

But across the nations, forms of paganism seem to be moving into the mainstream.

In New York City, pagan high priest Dan Halloran is the Republican candidate for a district city council seat.

Halloran describes his faith as Theodism, "a cultural, religious, and martial organization; dedicated to reviving the folkways of the Norman peoples of Northern Europe," according to his Web site.

The Unitarian Universalist Church has recognized wicca and other forms of neo-paganism since 1987 through its Covenant of Unitarian Universalist Pagans - sort of a denomination within a denomination.

Still some Christians aren't taking modern paganism lightly.

In Adamstown, Pa., some businesses closed on Sept. 12, when a group of self-described pagans and witches rented space to hold a festival.

"We believe in God, not in worshipping Satan or anything like that," business owner Terry Hertzog told The Associated Press. "We can't really support that, and as a result we're just going to stay closed."

Most pagans emphasize that Satanism is not a form of paganism, but rather a Christian notion.

Such misunderstandings meant being openly pagan was once "really scary," Aponte said.

"It's not like that anymore."

Rooted in the earth

Aponte said paganism's image has softened in recent years, partly aided by the environmental movement.

Still, in the South where religion is a regular topic of casual conversation, some local pagans say they rarely use the word to define their beliefs.

"I consider myself a spiritual person, an earth-based spiritual person," Aponte said.

Paige McDuffie, 40, has participated in the local Pagan Pride Festival almost since the beginning, both as a believer and as a vendor.

McDuffie and her husband own Inner Journeys, to be renamed Art and Soul, a Vidalia retail shop selling spiritual and metaphysical products.

McDuffie's spiritual practices involve a daily meditation and giving thanks before every meal.

When asked to whom she prays, she answered, "To whoever receives it. I'm just grateful."

McDuffie, Aponte and friend Juli Routon, 37, said they sometimes gather with other pagans on special days such as Yule and the summer solstice to mark the changing seasons. Or they may meet at the home of a struggling friend to pray for bad energy to go away or ask for blessings.

All say their families also celebrate major Christian holidays with traditions borrowed from paganism, including decorating trees, putting up lights and painting eggs.

The women said they grew up in Christian faiths, and most of their relatives are Christian. As mothers, they try to be discreet about their beliefs and don't enforce practices on their children.

McDuffie said her children have chosen different spiritual paths. Aponte's son chose to be confirmed as a Roman Catholic, a decision she supported.

Routon said she once volunteered at a Christian vacation Bible school when one of her children was invited.

But by their choice, her children are pagan, she said.

"My kids are growing up in a house surrounded by a goddess-based faith."

Feline Fun

This week in Feline Fun – Whoever said cats are smart?!?!

One day, I was enjoying a cherry flavoured yoghurt and thought I'd be nice and offer the cover to Ronron to lick. Ronron was sitting on the counter so I just dropped the cover in front of her.

I didn't see how she managed it, but she ended with one front paw covered in bright pink yoghurt. "Silly girl", I thought, "she'll lick it clean in no time". So I took the cover and bent to drop it in the garbage under the counter. When I stood again, I saw Ronron was still sitting with her paw all pink and watching me with big round eyes. "Ok, so she hasn't noticed her paw is covered in yoghurt yet, no big deal."

She stood up and was about to jump off the counter when something happened. Did she sniff the yoghurt? Did she feel her paw was heavier? I guess we'll never know, but she reacted.

Ronron started sniffing the counter passionately, looking for the yoghurt she could smell but not see. I could here the little nose go "sniffysniffsniifoo" and was already giggling. She was getting closer and closer to her paw, so I thought my fun was over, she'd find the yoghurt, lick and, that's that.

Well that was overestimating Ronron, it seems, because when she reached her paw, she lifted it to sniff the counter under it. That made the yoghurt move backwards and so she started sniffing in that direction. "Surely she won't do it twice", I thought.

Well not only did she do it twice, she did it a lot more than twice. She was walking backwards in circle, sniffing the counter and always moving her paw away before she could notice the yoghurt she was looking for was there.

I tried to hold her paw gently to her face so she'd see her error, but she gave me such a puzzled look,

I burst out laughing and she went back to her trotting and sniffing.

After a few minutes of this, I walked away. Soon Ronron was coming my way with a clean paw and begged for lovies. I'm thinking she just wanted a place to hide her red face...

Where's that tantalizing pink stuff?

Drawing on the Energies at Ancient Sites

George E. Lockett

If it's a dry day and you can sit on the ground and make a connection to the Earth, you can feel the energy of the area flowing around and through you. You may feel this in many ways: you may get a sense of the sounds made there in the distant past, and feel the wind on your face in a special way.

What I notice myself, as I sit and start to drift into a meditative state, is that the energies in my face become more pronounced. I get a kind of silly little grin forming and I feel the field of energy within my body and out into the aura becoming stronger and more charged up.

I become like a radio tuner with its base frequency which can amplify small fluctuations in the surrounding energies. As you tune into nature and imagine roots going down into the ground to earth your energy field, you become sensitive to the slightest change in your environment.

As you reach out with your feeling and sense the energies, you can choose what aspect of the energies you would like to tune into. You may want to allow your awareness to drift back a thousand years and feel what was happening in this area then.

As you sit there with your eyes closed you may find your sixth sense becoming active; you may start to see images in your imagination or hear sounds, smell the smoke of a campfire or taste the food that was cooking.

You may become aware of the quality of the energy and its mood. Is it happy energy or is there some other quality?

You may want to project your awareness forward and see how the interesting features and natural beauty of the area could be enhanced. You can use your imagination to create the blueprint for the nature spirits to work with to bring your dream into reality.

As you tune in deeper to the energies and allow your boundaries to become fuzzy; as you become one with nature, you attune to the vibration of the area and the interplay of the five elements of Fire, Earth, Air, Water and the Life Force itself.

You may sense the presence of the nature spirits or elves, angels, spirit guides ...

Using your imagination and feeling you could start up a conversation with them and discuss any areas of interest.

You may notice that you are also getting very deep relaxation and inspiration at the same time. To join to nature you have to tune your energies in and become one with nature. This has a very balancing and healing effect on you.

Some parts of the world are renowned for the healing properties of their energies. Know that it is the energies in your body that do the adjusting and balancing. Know also that this is a process of letting go, relaxing and releasing.

It is a process of moving out of your head and your intellect into your heart and your feeling and just being one with your body, nature and your Higher Self.

The nice thing is, as we allow our attention to go to these subtle layers of nature, we allow nature to merge with our awareness. As it does so, nature itself can become aware of its own essence and the whole planet can start to wake up and know itself.

This is the process of planetary Ascension: a re-merging of all the different aspects of ourselves. Parts that we have felt were separate start to become aware of their unified nature and the oneness of life itself.

Astrology Forecast for October 2009

General Tendencies for All Sun Signs

Janet (Sparrow) Moon

Ahh, the worst is over. Mercury's retrograde is over, the eclipses are over, and even Saturn and Uranus are backing away from each other. October looks like a great month for redecorating, new romance, and even some new financial opportunities.

We should be feeling rather perky as October begins. We may be starting some new projects or even making some new friends all the way through the Full Moon on Sunday, October 4th. Just be sure and use common sense, because some of those new ideas could be really off the wall.

We should find that Wednesday, October 7th, is a do anything kind of day. Our minds will be patient, and our energy will be focused. But, there could be some mood swings ahead as we approach the end of the week and the end of Sukkot. There could be some sudden relationship or money problems through Saturday October 10th, so be prepared.

Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday, October 11th through the 13th, could bring some romance into our lives. It will also be a good time for business, or even just cleaning and rearranging the house. Our eyes may be taking a new look at relationships and finances Wednesday and Thursday, October 14th and 15th, and some of us may find ourselves dealing with betrayal, theft, or jealousy as Venus argues with Pluto. The Sun and Neptune will be inspiring our creativity on Thursday and Friday, October 15th and 16th, but we may find ourselves feeling restless or uneasy over the weekend.

The whole week of October 19th looks great. We are going to be optimistic and creative. It will be a great week for travel, parties, and business meetings. This trend will continue through Sunday, October 25th.

Parties, travel, and conversations will be lively on Tuesday and Wednesday, October 28th and 29th, but we need to think before we act or we may end up looking stupid though Thursday. Practice moderation over the Halloween weekend. Some of those "tricks" will turn into riots, if we're not careful. There may also be a few accidents to deal with.

October will be smooth sailing, but the roller coaster will return in November. Some of us may find ourselves in very dangerous circumstances. Check back next month to find out more.

The Man in the Moon

The man in the moon cried out today.

It seems his lover went away.

The stars wept sparkling tears for his pain.

Would he ever see her again?

She left as he slept and the sun brightly shone,

She left his beautiful lunar home.

Why did she go and to where?

His beautiful maiden so fair -

The stars gathered him into their light,

They tried to save him from his blight.

But sorrow his heart did fill,

And the lunar light ceased to spill,

To light our way in the night -

So we're cursed to the dark with no light.

THE ORDER OF WEB WEAVERS CRYSTAL WEB MAPPING PROJECT

The Order of the Web Weavers has been working diligently on mapping the Crystal Web. If any of you have a crystal that you have added or removed from the Crystal Web contact us to ensure are records up to date and accurate.

The information we need in order to best catalogue your crystal/s is the following. Your Craft Name and E-mail Address along with your City, State, Country, Latitude, and Longitude. Sent to the following e-mail address: www@correllianorders.info

Please include the above information, if you have removed your crystal from the Crystal Web along with 'Remove' in the subject line. If you have added several crystals then we would need a separate entry for each crystal, unless they are located together. If they are located together then please include how many crystals are at that location.

We are excited about this project and hope that you will be too. Once the crystals have been properly catalogued we can then begin placing them on the map program. This will give us a good visualization on the Crystal Web. Thank you in advance for your participation in this wonderful project.

Bright Blessings,
The Order of Web Weavers

THE ORDER OF WORLD WALKERS

This Correllian order is headed by the Rev. Krystel High Correll and she is offering training for those who wish to join the order. The training consists of twelve lessons, one a month, for a year, offered through e-mail.

The purpose of this order is to fulfill the deeper purposes of the Correllian Tradition--advanced psychic and spiritual work, primarily conducted on multi-dimensional levels. This work includes:

Learning to connect and work with your spirit guides. Conscious dying and conscious incarnation. Advanced dream work. Exploring the known boundaries of the multi-dimensional universe, then conducting independent work to go beyond those boundaries. The study of time and advanced work within it. Soul rescue (helping those who are not aware they have died, or are not willing to cross over). Mediumship (being a voice for the so-called dead, visiting the land of the dead and communicating with them, and building a pathway between the living and the dead). Healing, both personal and of our Earth.

These purposes are divided among five houses that consist of the members who are dedicated to the work of the House.

The Order of World Walkers is a working order. The training is only the beginning. Each of the houses offer work that can be done for the rest of your life, if you choose to do it.

I believe that everyone who chooses to become a member of the order chose this before coming into this life time to continue work begun in other lives.

For more in-depth information, including the cost of the lessons, contact me at krystelneuman@yahoo.com

May You Blessed Be
Krystel
