Correllian Lustration of the Ancestors Ritual will be Sunday

Pagan Calendar 12 – 18 July

July 12. According to an age-old superstition, a child who comes into the world on the twelfth day of July ("the luckiest day of the year") will be destined for a life of wealth and great success.

Yama, the Buddhist god of death and the Underworld, is honored annually on this day in Tibet with an ancient festival known as the Old Dances.

This day is also sacred to the goddess Dikaosune, an ancient deity who presides over justice.

July 13. On this day, the birth of the vegetation- and fertility-god Osiris is celebrated by many Wiccans of the wiccan tradition. The annual death and rebirth of Osiris personifies the self-renewing vitality and fertility of nature.

In the country of Japan, the annual Bon festival is celebrated on this date in honor of ancestral spirits.

On this date in the year 1527, John Dee was born in London, England. He was renowned as an alchemist and was skilled in the arts of wizardry. For many years he served as the royal astrologer of Queen Elizabeth I. He died in poverty in the year 1608.

July 14. On this day, the birth of the wiccan falcon-headed god Horus is celebrated by many Wiccans of the wiccan tradition. Light a royal-blue altar candle and burn some frankincense and myrrh as a fragrant offering to him.

On this day in the year 1988, a series of mysterious crop circles began to appear in a wheat field near Silbury Hill in southwestern England.

July 15. On this day, the birth of the wiccan god Set (or Seth) is celebrated by many Wiccans of the wiccan tradition. Set is an ancient god of darkness and the magickal arts.

In China, this day is sacred to Ti-Tsang, the ruler of the dark Underworld. He is honored with an annual Festival of the Dead.

July 16. Ethiopian Constitution Day: Rastafari Ila day. On July 16, 1931, Emperor Haile Selassie I implemented Ethiopia's first constitution, creating a Parliament and the appointment of deputies. Supreme power and authority remained with the Emperor. A nyabinghi session honors the importance of Ethiopia.

July 17. A "Cosmic Convergence Meditation" will take place in Seattle, WA. This is a very special, powerful and incredibly important time in the Mayan Calendar in which the first inklings of global unity consciousness are showing up. This is a unique time when we can connect to the divine inspiration of knowing the interconnectedness of all of creation.

Other Realms of Existence

by Owen Waters

There are twelve density layers of consciousness in existence. The higher numbers are more subtle, more expansive in their scale than the lower numbers. Each lower density layer is more compressed than the one above it and it is formed within the one above it.

Some people call these realms dimensions, which can cause confusion, as a dimension is actually something else. When referring to the twelve density layers, or realms, the technically accurate term is density. A dimension is not a location or a higher realm. A dimension is a measurable component of reality, such as length, width, height or time.

A density is a layer of compressed consciousness. It is a location within Creation. Instead of saying that you live in third density (the physical realm), you can abbreviate it to '3D,' provided you remember that, in this case, '3D' is short for third density, and not for three-dimensional.

The original state of Infinite Being lies beyond twelfth density, as all densities are creations within its consciousness. The twelve density layers exist within the consciousness of Infinite Being.

The densities of immediate application to humanity are third, fourth and fifth densities.

3D: The physical realm

The physical world exists in 3D, or third density. Our minds are not limited to 3D, by any means. The global consciousness will go through a quantum shift when a critical mass in higher consciousness is reached. This critical mass will be achieved by a numerically small portion of the world's population because people with higher frequencies of consciousness have, proportionately, a much greater influence on the global mind atmosphere than do people who operate at lower frequencies of consciousness. As always, it will be the pioneers who change history.

4D: The spirit or astral realm

Throughout recorded history, fourth density has been the spirit or astral realm. 4D can be subdivided into twelve sub-layers or overtones, referred to in the plural as spirit or astral realms. When a person passes on from their physical incarnation, they typically move into residence in the third or fourth overtone of 4D. While physical experience can generate issues of emotional separation, 4D is an integrative density where people work through a healing of their issues. Spiritual seekers soon discover that there are higher, more subtle overtones within 4D and move there to study the higher truths of the universe.

5D: The soul realm

When the time comes to move on from the 4D spirit world, people move up into 5D in order to begin planning the experiences that they want to explore in their next incarnation.

Think of this as a kind of destiny workshop, where all possibilities are examined until, finally, one course of action is decided upon.

In 5D, the viewpoint of the soul is much wider than the focused viewpoint of the conscious mind in 3D. In 5D, space and time are seen as an interwoven tapestry of possibilities. Souls, during their research, can actually insert themselves into any situation in which they are interested, regardless of when and where.

In 5D, you can experience any event at any location and any point in time. You can go back into history or go forward into probable futures. You can view all possible outcomes of every potential situation and how it interacts with the probable actions of others. It works because your soul senses the total energy of each situation, seeing everything that would unfold if it were acted out.

So, in 5D consciousness, you can view exactly how a future event is likely to materialize. You can see it, feel it, touch it and know what your thoughts and feelings will be at that time because you actually insert your consciousness into the experience of the future event.

Ceromancy

How to tell fortunes with candle wax

To know the future by a candle's flame is covered quite adequately in this little poem from an unknown poet:

Touch a light to the little wick,
Watch it burn to the candlestick.
Study with care the little blaze;
Fortunes are told in its tiny rays.

If an unseen power makes it weak and low,
For you it foretells a tale of woe.
If that same power makes a blaze bright and healthy,
You'll be happy and wise, be good and wealthy.

For those who wish to pursue ceromancy, which is divination from forms produced by dropping melted wax in water, it is simple enough for anyone to try. Use any colour candle, though the darker hues will show up best. It takes only a bit of imagination on the part of the magician to "see" the images which emerge from a bit of hot wax allowed to drop into a bowl of cold water.

The Heart as an Organ of Perception

Stephen Harrod Buhner

If we learn to know the shape of our heart field as well as we know our own hands, we can begin to use our hearts as we use our hands to touch the world around us. By cultivating the heart as an organ of perception, by learning to locate consciousness in the heart and find the moment when the soul essence of two things blend, humans can begin to know the nonhuman – plant, animal, and mineral – intimately.

Here's the science that shows you why and how.

Remember what it's like to see a puppy walking slowly along, sniffing the ground, tail wagging, small body slightly askew? Something pulls you toward the puppy, so you say, "Here, boy, over here," and the puppy looks up, sees you, and bounds over. In that moment, it's as if something leaves the puppy and enters you and something in you leaves your body and touches the puppy. You want nothing more than to hold each other and enjoy the warmth of your closeness.

We have this experience almost daily, with our dear friends, our children, and our mates. If we're lucky, we may feel it with a special piece of land, an old-growth tree, or a great ancient stone. It is one of the most real experiences we have, a particular kind of intimacy, yet we have no word for it in our language.

It is this moment of intangible touch that I've been exploring for the past 36 years as a psychotherapist, herbalist, and teacher. What would it be like to feel this every day, with everything, I wondered? What exactly is it and how could I create and sustain it?

It took me decades to find the answers to these questions. The ancient Greeks knew it well. They called it aesthesis, which means "to breathe in." They recognized that the moment of touch was accompanied by a gasp, a particular kind of inspiration. They considered it the moment when the soul essence inside us, and the soul essence from something outside us, met and mingled. It is the root of our word "aesthetic."

Years into my studies, I also began to connect something else to this experience. Indigenous peoples who still live close to the earth experience life very differently than we do in the West; they seem to perceive things that we cannot see, things that they are surprised we do not perceive. The explanation for this is simple, but profound: when you ask them where in the body they live, they gesture to the region of their hearts, while modern Westerners typically point to their heads. Perhaps the great lyrical writer Antoine de Saint-Exupéry had some insight into this phenomenon when he wrote, "And now here is my secret, a very simple secret. It is only with the heart that one can see rightly; what is essential is invisible to the eye."

How Molecules Create A "Soul"

Consciousness studies in the late Sixties focused almost entirely on the brain, in part because conventional wisdom held that it is our brain that distinguishes us from Earth's other inhabitants. A few researchers in the decades that followed, however, worked without this preconception. Rollin McCraty at the HeartMath Institute is one; he began to look at the heart and its role in cognition and awareness. He, and others, suspected that consciousness might be highly mobile, that it might habituate itself to different locations in the body, and that it might not be limited to the brain.

One of the most important ideas to emerge from these studies is that our organs, and the human organism itself, are highly complex "nonlinear" organisms in which the whole is far more than the sum of the parts. Or, as Ary L. Golberger, MD, director for the Rey Laboratory and professor of medicine at Harvard University, put it: "The body is a complicated symphonic system, much like nature itself...nonlinear systems composed of multiple subunits [such as the body] cannot be understood by analyzing these components individually."

To begin to understand how these nonlinear systems behave, it helps to look at clusters of molecules. Researchers have found that when billions and billions of molecules are placed in an enclosed container, their movements are, at first, random. But at some moment that can never be predicted, all the molecules spontaneously synchronize. They begin to move and vibrate together and tightly couple together into one coordinated whole, becoming one system. In that moment of synchronicity, something comes into being that is more than sum of its parts. And that something – call it the soul of us -- can never be found in any of the parts or subunits.

At that moment of synchronicity, the new system also begins to display what are called emergent behaviors as it act on the parts, or subunits, to stimulate further, more complex synchronizations. A continuous stream of very rapid information – in the form of temperature fluctuations, velocity, pressure, chemical, electric, magnetic - begins to flow from the parts to whole and from the whole back to the parts in order to stabilize the system, according to Stanford University biologist Jan Walleczek. The meanings within the molecules, called an electromagnetic (EM) signature, tell the receiving organisms how these things can affect its state of being. The meanings are analyzed and integrated into the organism, and a response is initiated.

All living systems work this way, retaining an exquisite sensitivity to disturbances in their equilibrium. They remember this equilibrium because they are highly intelligent and possess a soul force, this thing that comes into being that is more than the sum of the parts.

The heart is such a nonlinear system. It possesses both self-organization and emergent behaviors. It functions not only as a powerful endocrine gland, but also as a unique kind of brain, a cognitive and perceptual organ, and a powerful electromagnetic generator and receiver.

The Field of the Heart

The heart contains pacemaker cells that set the beating pattern. At the moment of self-organization, the first pacemaker cell begins beating, pulsating or oscillating, at a regular rhythm. Every new cell hooks itself to this one and begins beating in time with the first. This is called entrainment. Individual pacemaker cells tightly couple together by the millions in the heart and as they do, perceptual capacities that are unique come into being. As Goldberger notes, "Nonlinear coupling generates behaviors that defy explanation using traditional (linear) models."

The electromagnetic field that is produced when the heart fully comes online is much larger than that which is created by the individual cells themselves. It is 5,000 times stronger than the brain's and can be measured by the most sensitive scientific instruments up to 10 feet from the body. It is strongest at body surface and up to 18 inches away but continues out indefinitely into space, like radio waves. As Mae-Wan Ho, a biologist at the Institute of Science in Society, notes, "The visible body just happens to be where the wave function of the organism is most dense."

Heart cells entrain not only with each other; the heart also entrains with other EM fields it encounters. At that moment of entrainment, when the two fields begin oscillating in unison, there is an extremely rapid exchange of information. As the information from each heart field is taken in by the other, heart function alters, hormonal cascade changes, and alterations in physiology occur. A kind of dialogue begins.

When the heart field of a healer and a patient meet, for example, the electrocardiograph (ECG) or heart pattern of the healer can be found in both the ECG and electroencephalograph (EEG) or brain patterns of the patient, according to research by Rollin McCraty. The heart field of the healer literally paces the patient into new patterns of health.

Heart entrainment is extremely natural to us, and happens at the earliest stage of life. In the womb, the infant's heart entrains with mother's and continues to do so after birth, writes Joseph Chilton Pearce in his book, The Biology of Transcendence. The mother's EM field is filled with information and meaning, including how she feels about her infant (in fact, how we feel always alters the information encoded in our heart's wave pattern). Babies, like all living systems, take this information and decode it. We remain sensitive to these fields after birth because we have gestated in the midst of this kind of language. Once born we routinely, and often unconsciously, scan encountered fields for information. And the way we, as humans, encounter these fields is unique: we experience them as emotions.

In its essence, the heart is an extremely sensitive sensory organ, whose domain, we instinctively know, is feeling. Recent research reveals why: our heart processes a particular and unique EM bandwidth with complex signals that we experience as unique emotional complexes. These EM signals, taken in through the heart, are processed in the brain in the same manner as our conventional senses such as sight and smell. Unfortunately, this kind of emotional perception of the world starts to atrophy in most of us when we begin locating consciousness in the brain.

The Heart-Mind Information Superhighway

Living organisms possess extremely complex electromagnetic fields and these fields encode everything about the organism that produces it: its state of health, history, potentials, and much more. When the EM field is allowed to pass into and through the heart, it is routed into the brain for analysis where the information and meaning in the EM signature are extracted.

The heart can act as a “mind” or perceptory organ for a simple physiological reason: roughly 60 percent of heart cells are neural cells, and function in a similar way to those in the brain. They cluster in ganglia and connect to the neural network of the body through axon-dendrites. This is not an accident. The heart has direct connections to specific centers of the brain and these connections create a direct, unmediated, flow of information from the heart to the brain, according to research by Gary Schwartz, professor of psychology at the University of Arizona, and Linda Russek, of The Heart Science Foundation. The heart, in fact, is hardwired into the amygdala, thalamus, hippocampus, and cortex – brain centers involved with emotional memories, sensory experience, the extraction of meaning from sensory inputs, problem solving, reasoning, and learning. To enhance communication with the brain and central nervous system, the heart also makes and releases its own neurotransmitters as it needs them.

The mind-heart connection is further enhanced if a state called “heart coherence” occurs, according to McCraty. During coherence, the rhythm of the heart sets the beat for the entire organ system and the body as a whole. When this happens, the amplitude of the heart waves increases, giving the heart field greater depth and power.

There is also, at coherence, an immediate change in brain function. Large populations of cells in the forebrain begin oscillating to the rhythm of the heart. The brain waves ride on top of the heart waves. The perception of those brain cells - the kinds of information they process - is very different than when consciousness is located in the heart. As brain function changes, so does what we see and learn. What people perceive when they live from the heart is quite different than what they perceive when they live in their heads. A whole new world opens up in coherence, and things not normally perceived become commonplace.

When someone in a state of heart coherence allows their heart field to entrain or merge with another EM field, the rapid download of information between the organisms happens naturally. And while this information download is a language of its own, it rarely happens in words. In one sense, it can be thought of as a direct conveyance of meaning without language. Information flows through the heart first, and is then routed to the brain through the direct heart/brain connections for further processing.

There is a translation process that occurs, much like the one our radio receivers provide as they convert radio waves into music. However, in human beings the process is much more complex. The brain translates the sensory data, memories, experiences, and knowledge it stores into certain forms - visions, sounds, images, feelings, tastes, words, or smells. From these forms, which are shaped by the culture in which we are raised, come meaning.

The Shape of Your Heart Field

All of us live immersed in meaning-filled fields of information. They flow into us from the moment of our birth, just as ours flow out. We experience these fields not as a stream of words on a page but as emotions, the touch of life upon us. This interchange, rooted in our hearts, alters our lives, shapes its quality, reminds us that we are never alone. It reconnects us to the ground of being from which we have come and nurtures in us a natural empathy with the world around us. We are one intelligent organism among many, one ensouled form among a multitude. Heart cognition moves us from a rational orientation in a dead, mechanized universe to one in which the unique perceptions and emotions are noticed and strengthened. It allows us to deeply experience the living soulfulness of the world and so constantly reweaves us back into the living fabric of life. We may be out of practice, but our capacity to perceive from the heart comes naturally to us, never disappearing. As I've explained, we are made for the nature of each thing to pass into us through our hearts, which store memories of this thing and engage it in dialogue.

With practice, it is possible to learn the shape of your heart field as well as you know your own hands, and to begin to use your heart as you do hands: to touch the world around you. It is also possible to intentionally achieve a state of entrainment with other EM fields, allowing the information embedded within them to flow into you and be turned into usable information. It is, after all, as natural to us as the beating of our hearts. Ancient and indigenous people, locating consciousness on the heart, experience aisthesis as a regular part of their life. They know those moments when there is a blending of soul essence between two living things, when the human begins to know the nonhuman directly from itself.

Why We Can Talk to Plants

This ancient knowing explains how these people learn direct, depth healing of human disease and the use of medicinal plants: a blending of the EM fields between human and plant occurs of its own accord, and in that moment of synchronicity, a direct flow of information is exchanged. Often, this blending is experienced as a unique visionary or dreaming state.

Manuel Cordova-Rios, the great Amazonian healer from Peru, describes one such moment: "In infinite detail her internal organs appeared on the screen of my vision," he wrote. "As the liver came into my sight, it was obvious from its black color that it had ceased to function and I knew that it was no longer serving to purify the blood. As this became clear to me I turned my attention to the remedy and the appropriate plants appeared in my vision - flowers from the retama tree and roots from the retamilla shrub. As the visions faded off into more general dreams I knew it was possible for her to recover."

This is how the great German poet and botanist Goethe discovered the "pregnant point," and, cultivating it, came to his understanding of plant metamorphosis (all parts of plants - pistils, stamens, trunks - are merely leaf morphed into different shapes). "He who sees into the secret inner life of the plant, into the stirring of its powers, and observes how the flower gradually unfolds itself, sees the matter with quite different eyes - he knows what he sees," wrote Goethe.

This is how the great agriculturalist, Luther Burbank, was able to coax new food plants into existence in two or three years and, trotting down rows of 20,000 seedlings, could pick the seven that would breed true. From him came most of the domesticated plants that we take for granted as food. It was sensitivity, he explained, that "partly accounts for my unusual success in selecting as between two apparently identical plants or flowers or trees or fruits."

This is how Masanobu Fukuoka, the great Japanese farmer, equals the yields of technological farming while using no fertilizers, weeding, or tilling of the soil. He taught himself to understand the true nature of barley from within itself, and to grow it under the unique conditions of his own field, and more, to see the human from the point of view of the barley. "Only to him who stands where the barley stands and listens well, will it speak and tell, for his sake, what man is," said Fukuoka.

When the heart as an organ of perception and cognition is reclaimed, we are no longer colonized by a particular kind of thinking and way of being, which is naturally engendered when consciousness is located in the brain. This way of thinking and being reduces the expression of perception and thought, reduces the breadth of full experience to a narrow band of what is permissible. Everything else is relegated to the superstitious, heretical, or unacceptable. Locating consciousness in the heart - using it to feel, and then to know - is the oldest way of being, intimately bound up in our humanness and our expression as an extension of the Earth we live on and from which we come.

Reductionist approaches can be likened to concrete sidewalks. They suppress the wild, but the power of the green - veriditas as Hildegard of Bingen called it - will always break through. It truly is possible, as our ancestors said, to follow our hearts. And in so doing, we find the living world from which our species emerged, and more, a deep and abiding joy in the simple act of being alive.

Getting the Feel of Your Heart Field

To get a sense of your heart field, have a friend stand 6 feet away from you with arms stretched out to their sides. Walk up to them slowly. From 12 to 18 inches from their body, you will suddenly begin to experience being "in their space." Your two heart fields touching. Once you know the feel of your field, you can learn to extend it out from yourself and use it like sensitive fingers to touch the world around you.

Simple Steps to Think With Your Heart

Focus on some kind of natural object. Notice its appearance, the different colors and shadings that it possesses. Fully immerse yourself in noticing its sensory aspects (or, put another way, come to your senses). This is the first step in getting out of your head.

Continue looking at the thing in front of you and ask yourself, "How does it feel?" This automatically activates the heart as an organ of perception. At that moment your attention is shifted to the electro magnetic field of the thing in front of you. You will then experience a unique feeling complex, which you probably can't name, as the EM signature of the thing moves through your heart.

Enhance this feeling, allow it to fill you, and as you do so, begin breathing through and with the feeling while continuing to focus on the thing in front of you. Notice how your breathing patterns have slowed, your eyes are soft-focused, colors are enhanced, and tension levels in your body are dropping. These physiological shifts always accompany the movement into heart-centered perception.

Reach out with your heart field and hold the thing in front of you. In this moment, feel caring for the thing in front of you (this creates specific alterations in the EM field of the heart). As you do this, your two fields will begin to entrain and you will feel a flow of energy going between you and it. If you are doing this with a plant, you might, at this point, ask the plant to tell you about itself. It was this exact process that George Washington Carver used to deepen his understanding of food plants such as the peanut. "Anything will give up its secrets," he said, "if you love it enough."

Spell of the Week

SPELL FOR BLESSING A NEW HOME, HOME CLEANSING

Home-cleansing methods are of great importance in African-American hoodoo folk-magic. Here is a simple procedure for blessing a new home and ridding a house of any unwanted spiritual influences.

Wash down the wood work and floors with Chinese Wash (or Van Van Oil in water) from back to front and out the front door and throw the remaining wash water out the front door or in the front yard.

If there is no front yard, carry some of the wash water to the nearest street intersection or crossroads and throw it to the East.

Then use a brand new broom to sweep the house from back to front and out the front door. Some folks also like to sprinkle Van Van Powder at the front threshold and sweep that away from the house.

After cleaning as above, put down pinches of salt in the corners of each room or, if you are in a hurry, four pinches of salt at the four outside corners of the house.

SPELL FOR HOME PURIFICATION

When you feel negativity building up in your home, or the occupants are not getting along: Use Sandalwood, Dragons blood or (if you can stand the smell) Patchouli Incense.

Make certain that you carry your censer or a stick of incense into each room. Use this in conjunction with a chant and meditation.

It's also a good idea to sprinkle sea or kosher salt on the carpet, then vacuum it up immediately after the ritual.

Egyptian Deities

Khonsu

(alternately Chonsu, Khensu, Khons, Chons or Khonshu) is an Ancient Egyptian god whose main role was associated with the moon. His name means "traveller" and this may relate to the nightly travel of the moon across the sky. Along with Thoth he marked the passage of time. Khonsu was instrumental in the creation of new life in all living creatures. At Thebes he formed part of a family triad with Mut as his mother and Amun his father. At Kom Ombo he was worshipped as son of Sobek and Hathor.

Typically he is depicted as a mummy with the symbol of childhood, a sidelock of hair, as well as the menat necklace with crook and flail. He has close links to other divine children such as Horus and Shu.

He is sometimes shown wearing a falcon's head like Horus, with whom he is associated as a protector and healer, adorned with the sun disk and crescent moon.

He is mentioned in the Pyramid Texts and Coffin Texts, in which he is depicted in a fierce aspect, but doesn't rise to prominence until the New Kingdom when he is described as the "Greatest God of the Great Gods".

Most of the construction of the temple complex at Karnak was centred on Khonsu during the Ramesside Period. His temple at Karnak is in a relatively good state of preservation and on one of the walls is depicted a cosmogony in which Khonsu is described as the great snake who fertilises the Cosmic Egg in the creation of the world.

Khonsu's reputation as a healer spread outside of Egypt with a stela recording how a princess of Bekhten was instantly cured of an illness when an image of Khonsu arrived.

King Ptolemy IV called himself "Beloved of Khonsu Who Protects His Majesty and Drives Away Evil Spirits" after he was cured of an illness. Memphis, Hibis and Edfu were locations of Khonsu's cult.

A – Z of Dreams

Earth. To notice the earth in your dream, indicates that you need to be "grounded" and realistic. Perhaps your sense of stability and security is lacking. Consider the consistency of the earth for additional significance on how you are feeling. If the earth opens or separates, then it represents a project or relationship that you are afraid of falling into. To see the planet Earth in your dream, signifies wholeness and global consciousness. You are interconnected with the world

East. To dream that you are headed east, represents inner wisdom, rejuvenation, and spiritual enlightenment. You need to dedicate yourself to your goals, family, career, etc. The direction east also symbolizes the sun. Since east is related to the direction right, it can suggest that you are headed in the right direction.

Elf. To see an elf in your dream, refers to some imbalance and disharmony in your life. The elf often serves as a guide of the soul. Alternatively, it suggests that you need to be more carefree, worry-free, and light-hearted

Emblem. To see an emblem in your dream, represents your cultural ties and ancestral links. The dream provides you with a sense of confidence and inner strength.

Emerald. To see an emerald in your dream, represents strength, longevity, immortality, faithfulness, durability, and fertility. You may be entering the healing stages of some situation.

Enchantment. To dream that you are being enchanted, indicates that you are being manipulated or influenced to your demise.

Escape. To dream that you escape from jail or some place of confinement, signifies your need to escape from a restrictive situation or attitude. Alternatively, it suggests that you are refusing to face your problems. You are avoiding the situation, instead of confronting them. To dream that you escape from injury, from an animal, or from any situation, signifies your good health and prosperity. You will experience a favorable turn of events.

ESP. To dream that you have ESP, suggests that you need to pay more attention to your intuition or gut feeling. Go with your hunch. The dream is a deep message from your unconscious.

Even Numbers. To see even numbers in your dream, signify balance or symmetry in your life. It also symbolizes tranquillity.

Exam. To dream that you are taking an exam, signifies insecurities, fear of not meeting others' expectations, and fear of failure.

Poets Retreat

The Sun
by Solar Spells ©

Fill the light with life and energy,
All the beauties of creation I make you see;
I shine at night also in the day;
For those who want to evolve I show you the way.

With inner light I give you reasons,
To celebrate the Litha season;
I float in the sky on astral ground,
The Sun in your life will always be around.

You can rely on me your shiny friend,
To shine a light on which you can depend;
I like to fly in outer space,
Delivering the message of love and grace.

Along with myself the super physical beam,
I like to fly with a planetary team;
We're known as God's by the pagans of Rome,
Who worship us and make us feel at home.

Apollo, Ra, call me and you will,
All your dreams to fulfil;
With power and divine spiritual might,
To illumine your body and soul of light.

Correllian Clergy Degree Program

A new membership has been created called the Correllian Clergy Degree Program. This is a 3-year program that can help you earn your Wiccan Degrees and Legal Clergy Status. Of course every lifetime and supporting member has access to this main program.

The purpose of this level is for those individuals who are interested in gaining their clergy status, and this offers an opportunity for members to do so affordably.

This program is only $49.99. To find out more:
<http://www.Witchschool.com/clergydegree.asp>

Witchschool Referral Program

Witch School, our long-time educational partner, has made an offer to the Tradition and its member Temples and groups.

Witch School has created a new Referral Program. The Tradition itself has enrolled in this program – as you can see from the button in the left-hand menu on correllian.com. You are encourage to consider enrolling your Temple or group as well, as a means of generating potential passive income.

The program works like this: members receive their own button which they can put on their website, in their email signature, etc... offering Witch School memberships. If anyone purchases a membership through your button, you will receive (approximately) 25% of the payment –that is $4 of a $19.99 yearly membership, or $25 of a $99.99 Lifetime Membership.

Each button has its own unique code which tracks payments made through it. If someone buys a membership through your button, then you get the abovementioned 25%.

If you are interested in finding out more about this program, or in signing up for it, go to www.witchschool.biz.

Witch School are offering a discount on supplies to Correllian Temples and groups in good standing: for example the Witch School books at 40% off cover price, and other discounts on the various items the school produces. If you would like to learn more about this, contact Lady Virginia at Virginia@witchschool.com and she will be happy to explain further.

These offers are being extended to all of our Correllian Temples, Proto-Temples, Witan Shrines, Formal Shrines, Personal Shrines, Orders, and Study Groups who might wish to sign up.

THE ORDER OF WEB WEAVERS CRYSTAL WEB MAPPING PROJECT

The Order of the Web Weavers has been working diligently on mapping the Crystal Web. If any of you have a crystal that you have added or removed from the Crystal Web contact us to ensure are records up to date and accurate.

The information we need in order to best catalogue your crystal/s is the following. Your Craft Name and E-mail Address along with your City, State, Country, Latitude, and Longitude. Sent to the following e-mail address: wwcw@correllianorders.info

Please include the above information, if you have removed your crystal from the Crystal Web along with 'Remove' in the subject line. If you have added several crystals then we would need a separate entry for each crystal, unless they are located together. If they are located together then please include how many crystals are at that location.

We are excited about this project and hope that you will be too. Once the crystals have been properly catalogued we can then begin placing them on the map program. This will give us a good visualization on the Crystal Web. Thank you in advance for your participation in this wonderful project.

Bright Blessings,
The Order of Web Weavers

THE ORDER OF WORLD WALKERS

This Correllian order is headed by the Rev. Krystel High Correll and she is offering training for those who wish to join the order. The training consists of twelve lessons, one a month, for a year, offered through e-mail.

The purpose of this order is to fulfill the deeper purposes of the Correllian Tradition--advanced psychic and spiritual work, primarily conducted on multi-dimensional levels. This work includes:

Learning to connect and work with your spirit guides. Conscious dying and conscious incarnation. Advanced dream work. Exploring the known boundaries of the multi-dimensional universe, then conducting independent work to go beyond those boundaries. The study of time and advanced work within it. Soul rescue (helping those who are not aware they have died, or are not willing to cross over). Mediumship (being a voice for the so-called dead, visiting the land of the dead and communicating with them, and building a pathway between the living and the dead). Healing, both personal and of our Earth.

These purposes are divided among five houses that consist of the members who are dedicated to the work of the House.

The Order of World Walkers is a working order. The training is only the beginning. Each of the houses offer work that can be done for the rest of your life, if you choose to do it.

I believe that everyone who chooses to become a member of the order chose this before coming into this life time to continue work begun in other lives.

For more in-depth information, including the cost of the lessons, contact me at krystelneuman@yahoo.com

May You Blessed Be
Krystel
