DNA Profiling

www.kennelclub.org.uk

In addition to the sensible precaution of micro chipping, you can arrange for your dog to have a DNA profile taken and recorded as an additional means of identifying your dog if it should be lost or stolen. Such a scheme is not yet available for cats. The information below is from the Kennel Club (UK) web site

DNA Profiling

Identification

The DNA profile is the ultimate in individual identification and offers a 'tamper-proof' means of identity. The profile need only be produced once and the DNA sample used to produce it can be stored as a permanent DNA record throughout the dog's life. Identification could be essential in a number of instances. For example, the availability of a profile could be used to identify an animal that may have been lost or stolen, and subsequently recovered. The profile could also be used to check the authenticity of a DNA sample being used to screen for the presence of disease-causing genes. Many such tests are being developed and it would be invaluable to be able to verify that the correct dog's DNA is being tested for the presence of the deleterious gene. Repeating the DNA profile on the same sample of DNA being used to carry out the gene test would be straightforward and prove conclusively that the correct animal is being tested.

Please note: DNA profiles are not instantaneous, so it is worthwhile micro chipping your dog in addition. They also do not give information on the disease status.

Parentage/pedigree analysis

Provided that the DNA profiles of both parents are available, pups in a litter can be profiled and their profiles checked with their parents' profile to verify that the correct parents have been registered.

DNA profiling kit request - KC DNA profiling service

DNA profiling costs £25 per dog, and this amount is payable on ordering a profiling kit. Once ordered, a kit will be sent to you together with instructions on how to get a sample from your dog (by rubbing loose cheek cells onto a swab). Once you have taken the sample, you will need to return the kit, in the envelope provided, to the laboratory. Once a DNA profile has successfully been completed, you will receive a DNA Profiling Certificate and your dog's KC records will be updated accordingly.

Ancient dial solves time riddle

Rev. Nehal

A new discovery at an island abbey in the Firth of Forth has revealed the Augustinian canons who once lived there measured time using a mass dial.

Conservationists working at Inchcolm Island found the remnants of a special sundial which they believe may have been carved into a wall.

Until now mystery has surrounded the method used by the order to tell time.

While well-known in England, the British Sundial Society said there were relatively few dials in Scotland.

Historians believe the Augustinian canons lived according to a strict routine, which made it essential everyone in the community did the right thing at the right time.

The dials were carved into the walls of some churches and monastic buildings

The dial at Inchcolm, which has been broken in two, was discovered by Historic Scotland collections registrar Hugh Morrison and medieval stones expert Mary Markus.

They were carrying out preparatory work for a project to examine and catalogue a collection of about 50 pieces of carved medieval stone being kept at the abbey but which were never studied.

'Accurate measurement'

Mr Morrison said: "While sorting through the stones I found a fragment with distinctive radial markings carved on it that reminded me of mass dials that I had seen on churches in Gloucestershire.

"In a separate location I turned over another stone and was really pleased to discover that it fitted together with the other half of the mass dial.

"Better still, it still has the corroded stub of the iron gnomon which would have once cast its shadow along the radial markings of the dial."

Mr Morrison said he was hopeful his team would be able to discover the original location of the dial on the south side of the abbey.

He added: "Medieval timekeeping was very different from our present day dependency on the accurate measurement of time for catching trains, getting to work or viewing TV programs.

"Changing seasons and weather meant that mass dials could not always be used but when the sun shone they provided a relative means of coordinating community activities."

An introduction to Paganism

By Rhiannon Biddulph of The Pagan Association

Paganism describes a group of contemporary religions based on a reverence for nature. These faiths draw on the traditional religions of indigenous peoples throughout the world.

Paganism is an umbrella term which covers a multitude of different belief systems and religions. There are a few common themes which run through those beliefs which align themselves under the pagan umbrella.

Many pagans feel a deep reverence for nature and see contact with nature as a way of coming closer to deity in all its aspects.

Modern paganism draws heavily on the indigenous beliefs of this country and the lands where the tribes who settled in this country came from, such as Normandy, Denmark, Saxony, etc. However, just as our ancestors have evolved, so too has paganism.

To many Pagans, their beliefs are more than a religion; they are a way of life, seeking to live in sympathy with nature in today's modern world.

Many pagans see themselves as very much a part of nature, not above it. Pagans also advocate self-responsibility; we are responsible for our actions.

Due to persecution and misrepresentation it is necessary to define what Pagans are not as well as what they are. Pagans are not sexual deviants, do not worship the devil (are not Satanists), are not evil, do not practice 'black magic' and their practices do not involve harming people or animals.

Pagan Paths

These are just a handful of the many paths within paganism:

Druidry - Emma Restall-Orr of the Druid Network defines druidry as the native spiritual tradition of the islands of Britain.

We know a little about the original druids, the priesthood of the tribes settled in Britain around the time of the Roman conquests, from the writings left by the Romans. It's ethics are based on honour, respect and living fully in a sacred manner.

Heathenry - The original Heathens were the pre-Christian North European peoples who lived a thousand and more years ago in the lands around what is now called the North Sea.

These included the peoples of Anglo-Saxon England, Scandinavia, Germany and Frisia (Friesland). Heathens work to build healthy relationships with gods and goddesses, ancestors, spirits of the land, and others in their communities, both through holy rites and through their day to day actions.

Heathenry is polytheistic. Although the Heathen gods are best known from Norse Mythology they were honoured by many peoples outside of Scandinavia. Some of the most well known Heathen gods are enshrined in our English days of the week.

Tuesday is named after Tiw (Tyr), Wednesday after Woden (Odin), Thursday after Thunor (Thor) and Friday after the goddess Frige (Frigg).

Another characteristic of Heathen religion is the respect given to ancestors in general. These may be a person's literal forebears, or may be people now dead who have inspired them in some way.

Wicca - Wicca has the honour of being the only religion given to the world by Great Britain. In the 1940s a retired civil servant, Gerald Gardner, claimed to have been initiated into a witches coven, members of a cult originating in prehistory, that had survived through the witch hunts and been kept alive within small covens.

It is an eclectic religion, with Gardner and the original founders of Wicca drawing upon many sources to promote the religion of Wicca.

Wicca is an Earth-based, Nature focused spirituality, drawing on the beliefs and practices of pantheism, gnosticism, ceremonial magic, witchcraft and the pagan religions of the old worlds.

Wicca is an initiatory Tradition, and most Wiccans work in a group called a Coven, which can be a small group of two or as big as 13 or more. Wiccans believe in a Goddess & God and celebrate the union between them. Wiccans also perform their ceremonies in a 'circle' and work closely with the four elements.

Wiccans meet to celebrate the 8 Sabbats (The Wheel of the Year or Seasonal Celebrations) and often also meet to work together at the Full Moon. Through working through the Wheel of the Year we come to learn the mystery of death and rebirth, the circle of life.

Shamanism - Although Shamanism originally meant a spirit walker/healer from the tribes of Siberia, today it has taken on the meaning of someone who walks between the worlds.

The distinguishing characteristic of shamanism is its focus on an ecstatic trance state in which the soul of the shaman is believed to leave the body and ascend to the sky (heavens) or descend into the earth (underworld).

The shaman makes use of spirit helpers, with whom he or she communicates to aid in whatever magical act the shaman is undertaking.

Pagan Worship

Due to the large and diverse number of pagan paths, there are an equally large number of ways to worship.

However, most pagans are happy to join in and celebrate the 8 Sabbats, the Wheel of the Year festivals, with their fellow pagans, even if these are not strictly a part of their path.

A typical sabbat celebration will involve forming a circle, meditation or pathworkings, honouring of divinity, and sharing of cakes and wine with each other.

Many of the modern pagan sabbats are based on countryside traditions, some modern, some old, but all of them have seeped into the popular consciousness.

Festivals and holy days - the eight Sabbats

* The Pagan seasonal cycle is often called the Wheel of the Year. Almost all Pagans celebrate a cycle of eight festivals, which are spaced every six or seven weeks through the year and divide the wheel into eight segments.

* Samhain/Halloween (31st October) - a time to honour the ancestors and our beloved dead. To prepare for the depths of winter. The God enters the underworld, symbolically dying so that the earth and life may continue.

* Yule/Midwinter (21st/22nd December) - a time to celebrate Longest Night, traditionally a time of feasting and merriment. We celebrate the rebirth of the God, the Divine Child of Light.

* Imbolc (Beginning of February) - this is when we start to see the beginning of Spring, the lengthening days and the return of warmth and life. The Goddess, personified in nature, begins to awake from winter's slumber.

* Spring Equinox/Ostara (21st/22nd March) - we now enter the light half of the year, days are longer than nights and spring is well underway. The God, represented to us by the Sun, begins to gain in strength.

* Beltane (Beginning of May) - we celebrate the start of Summer, a time to rejoice and make merry. Throughout the country villages will be celebrating with Green Men, morris dancing and maypoles.

* Summer Solstice (21st/22nd June) - we celebrate Longest Day when the sun is at it's peak. The God is at the peak of his strength.

* Lammas (Beginning of August) - the celebration of the first harvest from the fields, when the corn is cut and we begin to look towards winter.

* Autumnal Equinox (21st/22nd September) - we now enter the dark half of the year when days are shorter than nights. The God is now on the wane, readying for his descent into the kingdom of death.

Stonehenge

Places of worship

Although many pagans see all of creation as sacred, there are places which retain a special place in our hearts. Some of the better known places are those that were built by our ancestors, Stonehenge, Avebury and other stone circles.

We may never know what these stone circles were originally used for, but through honouring divinity in these places, we try to draw closer to the spirit of the people who first built them.

Many pagans will also have their own special and sacred place which they visit - a grove of trees, a secluded hillside, a favourite stream.

Holy Books

There are no set books, so sacred texts, no bibles within Paganism. However, there are certain writings which we can read to increase knowledge and understanding.

The Icelandic Sagas, the Mabinogion, the Greek Myths are all sources where we can begin to understand how our ancestors viewed deity and their relationship with deity.

Pagans do not believe that any one path has a monopoly on the truth and so are willing to read widely, including books and writings from other religions, to better understand themselves and their chosen spiritual path.

Soul development should take precedence over all things.

Thought of the Day:

This new moment

The world is new in this new moment. Opportunity is fresh, and possibilities are yours to be fulfilled.

Regardless of what has already happened, today will be what you decide to make of it. Decide to fill it with meaningful treasures of your own unique design.

Don't be hindered by the disappointments of the past. In this new moment, you can choose a new, positive, purposeful direction.

Consider where you have been, what you have experienced, and all you have done. In this new moment, take the very best of who you have become and create some new, wonderful value.

You can learn, you can act, you can understand, you can love, you can appreciate, you can wonder, and you can fully live. Now is when the beauty of who you are can be expressed in a new and unique way.

This new moment is bursting with possibilities. And there is much new joy for you to know.

Feline Fun

Rev. Nehal

This week in Feline Fun – A cat saves his neighbour from a fire..

Cat saves man from burning home

A pet cat is being hailed a hero after saving a man from his burning home.

Engineer Andrew Williams was asleep when the fire broke out at his bungalow in Bracknell in Berkshire.

As black smoke filled the property, his neighbour's cat Hugo came through a cat-flap and raised the alarm by clawing at the father-of-two's face.

Rescuers said that the fire could have killed Mr Williams if he had not been awoken by Hugo. A smoke detector had been moved during work on the bungalow.

The fire, which broke out at the family home in Birch Hill at about 0200 BST on 1 August, was caused by an electrical fault. Mr Williams had removed a smoke detector from his ceiling while decorating and moved it to a different place. It only activated after he had been woken up.

He said he then went into "autopilot", calling the fire service and trying to put out the blaze himself.

Mr Williams, whose wife Sarah was visiting her sister at the time, was treated at the scene after breathing in smoke.

Hugo and his brother Harvey are regular visitors to the cat lover's home.

Mr Williams said: "I was woken up with Hugo sitting on top of me clawing at my face. He was trying to wake me up.

"The fire chief said that I had better buy the cat a big piece of fish because he saved my life.

"I'm just so thankful to that little fella."

A spokesman for Royal Berkshire Fire and Rescue said: "We are delighted that this very fire-aware cat was able to alert the family on this occasion.

"This just highlights the importance of having working smoke detectors inside your home."

"As Japan's Mediums Die, Ancient Tradition Fades"

By Martin Fackler ("New York Times", August 20, 2009)

Mount Osore, Japan - Its name means the Mountain of Horror, which seems an apt description for this sacred Buddhist site inside the crater of a dormant volcano. The weather-beaten temple here is surrounded by a lifeless lake and a wasteland of naked rock reeking of sulfur that conjures images of Buddhist hell.

But during the mountain's twice annual religious festivals, visitors come by the busload to line up before a row of small tents in a corner of the temple. Within are the "itako" — elderly, often blind women who hold séance-like ceremonies that customers hope will allow them to commune with spirits of the dead.

These spiritual mediums seem out of place in a hyper-modern nation better known for bullet trains and hybrid cars. Found only in peripheral areas like this volcano on the far northern tip of Japan's main island, and only dimly known to most Japanese, the itako are among the last remaining adherents to ancient shamanistic beliefs that predate Buddhism and modern forms of Shintoism, Japan's two main religions, historians say.

They have survived government efforts to stamp them out, as well as the continuing disdain of many Japanese, who look down on them as charlatans who trade in superstition. Even the deputy abbot at Bodai-ji, Mount Osore's temple, said the itako were not connected to the temple, which he said only tolerates their presence.

Now, however, even these last remaining itako are vanishing. Only four graying itako appeared at Mt. Osore's weeklong summer festival this year, three having died of old age in the last year. Worse, the only practicing medium younger than retirement age — 40-year-old Keiko Himukai, known among believers as the last itako — stopped coming this year for health reasons.

"We can see a very ancient flame dying out before our eyes," Ms. Himukai said in a separate interview. "But traditions have to change with the times."

Junichi Tonosaki, a historian in the prefectural museum in Aomori, where Mount Osore is located, said the number of itako had fallen from about 20 a decade ago. He said they began gathering at Mount Osore in the last century as their numbers began to dwindle, to make it easier for customers to find them. The volcano's 1,200-year-old temple is believed by many here to be a gathering point for souls of the dead before Buddhist reincarnation.

Mr. Tonosaki and other historians say itako and other shamanistic mediums were common across Japan in medieval times, when this was often the only occupation available for the blind. But they were suppressed in the late 19th century, as Japan built a modern nation. In recent times, they have survived only on the geographic margins, in rural northern Japan and on the southern island of Okinawa.

Shojiro Kurokawa, 82, can remember as a child in the 1930s when residents of his and other nearby villages would trek to the temple to hold weeklong festivals of all-night dancing, singing and séances. In those days, he said, there were more than 100 itako.

"This is an era when children ignore their parents and forget about the dead," said Mr. Kurokawa, who runs an inn near the temple that caters to visitors of the spiritual mediums.

Now, there are so few itako that visitors routinely wait in line for several hours to see one. Itako charge 3,000 yen, or about $30, for each spirit called in a roughly 10-minute ceremony.

One family of three came from Tokyo, a day's drive away. Masako Toyama, 68, said she came to speak with her husband, who died suddenly last summer of cancer. She, her son and his wife said it was their first visit to Mount Osore. She said she knew of the itako from growing up in northern Japan.

"They were a scary but also soothing presence," Ms. Toyama said. "Japanese still need this sort of emotional support."

"I wanted to give the itako a try, to see if this is real," said the son, Shinji Toyama, a 41-year-old salary man at a medical testing firm.

When the Toyamas' turn finally came after six and a half hours of waiting, they seemed almost taken aback by the itako's modern appearance, in pink-tinted glasses and a flower-patterned shirt.

The itako, Setsu Aoyama, began by lifting a long strand of dark beads and began a short chant: "I call the spirit who died on July 11," the date Ms. Toyama's husband, Shigeto, died.

In the same rhythmic cadence, swaying her head with eyes shut, she assumed the voice of Shigeto. "I didn't go to a doctor soon enough," she intoned. "Men don't listen to things like that."

Ms. Himukai, the 40-year-old itako, says she enters a trance in which she feels the presence of the spirit and its mood, which she expresses in her own words. She said she decided to begin the three-year period of study to become a spiritual medium as a teenager, after an itako near her rural village cured her of an ailment that doctors could not fix.

She said she felt guilty about not going to Mount Osore. However, she said she may no longer be able to attend because of health problems, including a chronic stomach ailment. Instead, she said she wanted to write a book or make a movie about the itako.

"The end can also be the beginning of something new," said Ms. Himukai, who wore a plain gray suit with pants and spoke in a whisper.

After the ceremony, the Toyamas had mixed reactions. The widow said her heart had been put at ease. But the younger generation was less convinced.

"I didn't feel like it was really my father in front of me," said Shinji, the son. But he said he wanted to come again next year, to try a different itako. "Maybe we just had beginner's bad luck by choosing the wrong one."

Poets Retreat

The Promise

I am the light and darkness
You find on life's path
I bring your answers in clarity so bright
I have you contemplate and bring it to light

I am the sound and the silence
You feel deep in your heart
When you reach despair and feel pulled apart
I am the song that you heart sings when refreshed like the morning spring

I am with you when you feel alone
I taste your tears and read your fears
Yet you do not feel me

I stand beside you
Yet you do not see me

I speak with you
Yet you do not hear me
Yet I do not leave you alone

For I gave the promise to always be
Here when you are ready to be one with me

She opens her arms for her children wide
Yet lets them have free will to hide
And when they can bear no more
She opens her arms once more.

THE ORDER OF WEB WEAVERS CRYSTAL WEB MAPPING PROJECT

The Order of the Web Weavers has been working diligently on mapping the Crystal Web. If any of you have a crystal that you have added or removed from the Crystal Web contact us to ensure are records up to date and accurate.

The information we need in order to best catalogue your crystal/s is the following. Your Craft Name and E-mail Address along with your City, State, Country, Latitude, and Longitude. Sent to the following e-mail address: wwcw@correllianorders.info

Please include the above information, if you have removed your crystal from the Crystal Web along with 'Remove' in the subject line. If you have added several crystals then we would need a separate entry for each crystal, unless they are located together. If they are located together then please include how many crystals are at that location.

We are excited about this project and hope that you will be too. Once the crystals have been properly catalogued we can then begin placing them on the map program. This will give us a good visualization on the Crystal Web. Thank you in advance for your participation in this wonderful project.

Bright Blessings,
The Order of Web Weavers

THE ORDER OF WORLD WALKERS

This Correllian order is headed by the Rev. Krystel High Correll and she is offering training for those who wish to join the order. The training consists of twelve lessons, one a month, for a year, offered through e-mail.

The purpose of this order is to fulfill the deeper purposes of the Correllian Tradition--advanced psychic and spiritual work, primarily conducted on multi-dimensional levels. This work includes:

Learning to connect and work with your spirit guides. Conscious dying and conscious incarnation. Advanced dream work. Exploring the known boundaries of the multi-dimensional universe, then conducting independent work to go beyond those boundaries. The study of time and advanced work within it. Soul rescue (helping those who are not aware they have died, or are not willing to cross over). Mediumship (being a voice for the so-called dead, visiting the land of the dead and communicating with them, and building a pathway between the living and the dead). Healing, both personal and of our Earth.

These purposes are divided among five houses that consist of the members who are dedicated to the work of the House.

The Order of World Walkers is a working order. The training is only the beginning. Each of the houses offer work that can be done for the rest of your life, if you choose to do it.

I believe that everyone who chooses to become a member of the order chose this before coming into this life time to continue work begun in other lives.

For more in-depth information, including the cost of the lessons, contact me at krystelneuman@yahoo.com

May You Blessed Be
Krystel
